Recommendations to local and regional wedding suppliers form the backbone of The Wedding Guide's support to help you find just what you need to make your wedding day arrangements all you want them to be.

Many suppliers have weblinks to help you find out more about the services they can offer you and their approach to their business.

Getting organised:

We suggest you organise your searches and results both by building your 'Favourites' and developing a file of printed pages and brochures that you gather. Many people find it helpful to sort these into different categories suggested by the different articles we have prepared for you. That way, you can refer to different services as they come up on your Planning Timetable, and confident that things are being done when they need doing with a minimum of stress and anxiety to you. As well as viewing websites, we strongly recommend that you are in touch personally with suppliers you are thinking of engaging. Many of the best specialists take a good deal of time and trouble to be available to you. You will often find that you meet several of the businesses you like the look of at wedding exhibitions near you. Visiting one or more of these events can save you lots of time and trouble travelling evening after evening, and are designed to make your wedding planning an altogether easier and more pleasurable affair.
